Subject: Help, please: Jonathan Wainscott

Good morning,

Jonathan's car was set on fire at his home over the weekend. I do not know where else to turn. I understand this is a bizarrely unique situation but I feel a pretty strong urge to reach out to you, so I am.

This is serious as Jonathan's life was put in danger. Along with the gun shooting death, the assault at the mall, the various larcenies the police talked about Saturday, he could have been killed this past weekend from a fire that was set on his property. We do not know who to talk to other than the police. I was able to get Officer Rice to return on Sunday afternoon and she interviewed him again and a neighbour (the person who called 911).

At any rate, this is what we know: In the early hours of Saturday morning around 3:00 am, someone set fire to his yellow car parked in the driveway of his home in the small neighbourhood he's lived for almost 20 years. The alarm woke him as well as the neighbour, Mary, when she immediately called 911. She then began taking video while Jonathan scrambled around in his bare-feet and pajamas with a garden hose trying to extinguish the rapidly growing fire. She and her husband were concerned for their own safety as this is an intimate corner of the rapidly developing area behind New Belgium.

The fire ignited his truck as well as set stuff on his porch ablaze. This could have burned his home down. He could have been killed just by the explosions coming from his car. This is serious. What is even more puzzling is the message that was carved into the paint, down to the metal, that the fire marshal saw when they were getting ready to leave. It said, "Leave her alone".

I have known Jonathan personally for a few years and we have been dating for over a year now. I am a WNC native and semi active in local matters so I know his history very well... better than almost anyone else. He has been working hard to get his life back in order over the past few years. He has a full time job at a local small business as well as his diligent data analysis concerning 'All Things Asheville'.

He works hard, takes care of his children, eats, sleeps and researches local matters as its his passion. I'm sure you are aware his initial degree path was Political Science. It is just in him. He is good at it. I spend about half of the week in his home along with my children at times (I have two daughters aged 11 & 13) as well as spending a lot of time with him and his children when they're here. He is an exceptional man and Father and I wish more folks knew him in that way. Personally, I think it is one of the reasons he presses on with community involvement so he can show people he really does care and how and why it matters for us to be a well informed city, especially with the Medfords and Greenes of the world... it makes it necessary, doesn't it?

At any rate, there is no "Her" that makes any sense. His ex moved over three years ago to Raleigh. He has no contact with her outside of the pick up and return of their beautiful children. When he counter fought for joint custody when she sought sole custody of their children, it was granted by the courts after their fairly public and ugly divorce. I was in court to testify on his behalf as a friend, before we ever began dating, so I know the situation intimately. Its bad enough that he has suffered the losses he has already, but any fear he experiences has only been amplified by the act of arson this weekend.

So, why am I writing you? Well, since I work an office job these days and unable to be as active as I'd like to/should be in political discourse, he keeps me informed on things he is working on. We have had many conversations about the districts as well as other stuff he researches. One reason I've been paying closer attention with the supposed gerrymandering is that my ex is black and therefore our children are multiracial. Racial disparities affect my personal family, so it matters. Jonathan Bcc'd me on the emails you two exchanged last week. He said the last communication was from you in regards to Senator Van Duyn and the request/favour to change the election year schedule (which he agrees to and feels it is the right thing to prevent voter fatigue, etc...). That was Thursday I believe.

As we are all well aware, he is very passionate about Asheville. He is also acutely aware that many institutions are not fond of him because he has raised some serious concerns and questions about what doesn't 'sit right' in local politics. He loves Asheville. He loves his family. He especially loves his children. He loves engaging in the community which he considers his Home even though he isn't a "native". It is understood he has garnered negative reaction from some folks in our community by being so vocal on important matters. We know he is dubbed a political 'gadfly' and has been considered "the thorn" in Asheville's side. He isn't interested in running for any political positions anymore, but he is an intelligent man who researches everything he ever brings to the table. In my eyes, he wants to be involved in the betterment of Asheville, not watch the decline of what brings thousands of people to visit or even relocate to our area for.

I digress.

I know that a former retired APD officer reached out to him on Sunday. They had a good enough discussion but that this investigation will have to be thorough and especially detailed because as that officer said, arson is almost impossible to prove. This needs serious attention. It is a highly unusual but extremely violent event against an individual. It is nothing less than terrorist act as per definition and not just my personal opinion. Please tell me and let him know that this will be as thorough an investigation as it can possibly be. Above arson on the assault scale? I cannot even imagine... but I can't even believe this happened to him in the first place. I also can't believe that a few years back he received a letter from the Mayor of Woodfin requesting Jonathan to shut up (Yes, in writing) either, but that happened. I saw the letter.

I know Officer Rice said the report should be available and as of yet, we haven't heard anything from a detective and this worries me. It does. A lot.

I look forward to your expedient reply.

Thank you,
Sandra JW Brown
