Use of Force Risk Assessment for Supervisors

Use of Force Assessment and Risk Management requires an understanding of many factors. Training for supervisors in the skill of assessing and evaluating use of force is not provided in management training because this is a profession specific function. With the use of force, risk cannot be eliminated. It can only be minimized and managed.

The ability to make quick, life-and-death decisions is a critical skill—one that must be honed to prevent unnecessary use of force. The Use of Force and Risk Management for Supervisors course is designed for supervisors and others who are responsible for risk management.

This course breaks down decision-making and documentation into processes that can be evaluated objectively. You'll also learn how to request additional clarity and detail from officers/deputies without corrupting the process.

Attendees can also expect to learn how to mitigate risks associated with failing to train and/or supervise in training and field environments. This course provides an assessment process for de-escalation knowledge, skills, decision-making, and documentation.
